An event organised by MARC
(Manchester Architecture Research Centre)

Parallel lives? Divergent perspectives?
City place revealed by first generation migrants

Clare Rishbeth

Clare Rishbeth is a lecturer in Landscape Architecture at the University of Sheffield. A geographically chequered professional CV (Slough, Somerset, Lahore, Sheffield) helped shape an interest in the relationship between culture, ethnicity and social aspects of landscape; and the implications for planning and design in ethnically diverse neighbourhoods.

The 'Walking Voices' radio and research project addresses the media panic about segregated communities, hands the microphone to people who have moved to Britain from abroad and asks them about where they live. How important is local place in helping new migrants settle, and how might understanding diverse values inform priorities for urban neighbourhoods?
