

Economics at Manchester

Manchester offers you:

- one of Europe's leading research departments;
- internationally renowned postgraduate training;
- a wide range of master's courses;
- a doctoral programme with funding possibilities.

Manchester is a leading centre for economics research and research-led teaching. Graduate students from across the globe come to study economics at Manchester, attracted by its first-class postgraduate training and supervision in the core and specialist areas of economics.

Many famous names from the world of economics have worked here at Manchester, including three Nobel Prize winners. Interdisciplinary research is actively pursued here, with many courses involving a number of different Schools at the University. You will also be automatically involved in our specialist research areas through the dissertation component of the MA and MSc, or through your research for a PhD.

Our economics doctoral programme is a three or four year "2+2" model. The first year is a Manchester MSc or equivalent, followed by a further year of taught course units. The course is completed with two years of full-time research.
