

Social Anthropology at Manchester

Manchester offers you:

- the ability to gain an anthropologically informed understanding of social life in different parts of the world;
- multidisciplinary, research-driven and research-inspired teaching;
- insight into the methodological aspects of ethnographic enquiry and the political and ethical issues involved in studying people.

Social Anthropology at Manchester has been ranked first in the UK for both research capacity and impact in the recent national 2014 Research Excellence Framework (REF) exercise. You will be provided with a comprehensive grounding in classical as well as contemporary debates in social anthropology. The course will also introduce you to the distinctive research methods and ethical positions associated with the discipline.

Staff in Social Anthropology at Manchester have a reputation for addressing cutting-edge and unusual research topics, while respecting classical and long-standing interests of the discipline. You can choose from a broad range of modules offered throughout the Faculty of Humanities, and apply the anthropological theories and methods learnt on the core modules to many substantive themes and topics. You will also devise and conduct your own research which will form your dissertation.

The level of personal support offered ensures that you will attain the highest standards. You will also have the opportunity to participate in anthropological research seminars, reading groups and conferences.

The Social Anthropology department is one of the largest in Britain and has an outstanding reputation for teaching and research.
